Fall 2007
Plan for students who have reached their two-semester limit for completing developmental courses

Outlined below are the enrollment conditions for students who failed to complete their developmental courses within the two-semester limit. If you haven't already done so, please share the plan with department heads, staff, and advisors as appropriate.

Here's the new plan:

The two-semester policy is not changing, however, the interpretation will be "you have two semesters to do it your way, and if you can't get it done, you'll have one more semester to do it our way".

This essentially means -

We will place registration holds on the students who do not complete their developmental classes in two semesters as planned.

We will send the impacted students a letter telling them they failed to meet the requirements of the policy but, instead of telling them they can't return, we will tell them they will be allowed one additional semester to complete their developmental courses but under the following conditions:

They must meet with their advisor before they can register.

They must register for one of a limited number of designated intensive sections of Math 92 and/or English 92.

They may register for no more than 12 hours including the developmental course(s) they need.

The non-developmental courses they take must be selected from a list of specified courses provided to their advisors by the academic deans.

They must sign an agreement to remain in the class, and participate in all required tutoring or academic support services, attend all classes, complete all assignments, and meet with their advisor periodically to review their progress in the course(s).

There will be 4 "special" sections of Math 92 and 2 sections of English 92 in the Spring schedule of classes (they are being added now if they haven't already been added). These sections will be "authorization required" so other students will not be able to enroll in them.

Once they meet with their advisors and receive approval for the specific courses they will be taking, they will go to Records and Registration to be enrolled in the courses. The "registration holds" will not be removed and the students will not be able to register themselves or make any changes to their schedules.
